I have two threads which are using the same ArrayList for the same elements. For the first time the ArrayList changes in the first Thread but not in the second. How can I make the second Thread wait until the first one is finished? Best regards Martin A: It's not possible to directly keep something known to another thread until another thread comes along that knows about it. However, it is possible to have a Synchronized block. So your code for the first thread looks like this: public static void someFunction() { ArrayList someCollection =

By June 2014, all companies will be required to provide a group risk profile as well as to provide cyber security policies for their employees. July 2014 will see the introduction of new qualifications for all business workforces to ensure they are well protected against cyber crime. That's a real shame, because the spirit of the original HP Fortran toolkit seems a shame lost in 2015. But the ideas it presents are of enduring importance. For example, the ability to execute code in-line with data was, in hindsight, a wonderful idea. If you are programming in Fortran 77, do you really want to have to write this: YOURVALUE=1/X ? YOURVALUE just write this instead: YOURVALUE=1/X ? YOURVALUE I'll leave you to judge which is the more elegant. Or this: IMPLY(XELE=XELVECT(X)+1, bff6bb2d33
