“By marrying the new artificial intelligence with this incredible technology, we’re able to push the art of simulation even further,” said David Rutter, senior gameplay architect on FIFA. “Whether it’s resolving one of the most difficult situations in human football or the new way we communicate information to players in a mid-match transition, our goal is to deliver a more authentic experience and new ways to compete in the world’s greatest sport.” Motion-capture technology lets you experience a more realistic game of soccer thanks to the camera, which is used to capture real-life movement in players, coaches, referees and even stadia. The new camera was developed in FIFA 22, and is able to capture a player’s movement in-game by reading all body and brain signals that athletes transmit to their opponents. This data is used to create a more life-like and authentic experience of the sport, by providing improved player interaction and responding to physical impacts and directions. The camera takes a similar approach to the feature seen in Major League Baseball (MLB) "Statcast™" system, which has also been used in FIFA games. Data collected from motion capture will also be used to improve FIFA’s AI. This technology will ensure players' reactions are more realistic, and help improve matchday functionality including substitutions, referee warnings, booking behaviour and team management. FIFA 22 will be available for PS4, Xbox One, and PC on September 27. FIFA 20 was released for PS4, Xbox One and PC in September of 2019. For more information about FIFA, please visit FIFA.com.
