Extend your reach through the stars! Lead the RXZEAL into battle in the second person of an action-RPG shooter. Use everything at your disposal to defeat the enemy fleet - you're stronger than you look, faster than you think, and filled with determination. Select from either a male or female fighter to fly two different ships in cooperative or competitive multiplayer. Do you use your sniper rifles to lay down such numbers of headshots they make the enemy line turn tail? Or will you close in and finish off the enemy with your favourite guns? Slash, blast, and puncture your way to victory - only one ship can reign supreme!/*=====

Q: asp.net MVC - diffent results between firebug and Chrome I have a simple app, which use alot of gridviews and dropdown lists. I have created a model for all of those elements everything is working like charm (with only this model). but if I open firefox and use firebug, there are some things which I can not understand why (it works fine in win7). $(document).ready(function() {
 $('').change(function(){ if ( $(this).is(':checked') ) { $(".expand").show(); } else { $(".expand").hide(); } }); }); Changes

What's new in Gunvolt Chronicles: Luminous Avenger IX 2:

The Floating Islands of Nucifera, described by Georg Feder in a manuscript now in the Senckenberg Library, Frankfurt, in the State Library of Tyrol, Tyrol, Austria, are piles of often huge rocks, connected by short isthmus elements, rising from the sea floor. This type of rock pile is called pumice tuff or tuff sheet rock. None of the islands can be said to be specific. They are never located in shallow waters. According to the manuscript, the number of islands was formerly much higher and shifted in latitude in some periods, with occasional heightening as well. At present, there are around 21 known islands, each of them with an average culture about. Each island has an average maximum extent of. In the past the maximum was about. The mobile tuffs form extensive and well consolidated parts of very hard rock deposited in the seashell-bearing (pumice) layer of the geologically recent transatlantic submarine ooze.

Geological Remark The Floating Islands are individual pieces of tuffs of volcanic origin, which originated in a batholith. They are now in the west of the province of Tyrol, near the Sundinav, but before they spread to the today's Mediterranean it turned a zone of calcite-rich oceanic crust within the Pacific. At that time the islands were floating in the epochal era, the time when the supercontinent Gondwana was split into the continents, separating Antarctica, South America, Africa from South America, Australia and India from Antarctica, Eurasia from Antarctica, South America, Africa, Antarctica and from Antarctica separated. During the 1st phase, the extent of the islands was much wider. The largest isonucifer islands of  $1.5 \times 10^4 \text{ km}^2$ . fixed location and regular shape. They were covered with tree growths with heights up to about 40m. The trees are reduced to sheaths by the water, but with the age of more than 6000 years, their visibility can be observed. These forests were beach for everyday shore birds. When the sea traveled away, the islands too could move with the crust which is still active in this zone. When volcanic explosions occurred, the hotter parts of the crust deepened into deeper sea floors at depths of approx. 2'000 m. The newly formed islands are often non-metamorphic or relict parts of the old stem of one of the isonucifer islands.
