The Nut Job 2: Nutty by Nature. A few days ago, the Hillary Clinton campaign began popping up on our Facebook feeds, trolling the Trump camp and poking fun at Trump's disconcerting foreign policy speech. This commentary from three presidential advisers is now becoming an internet meme, and has generated an enormous social media audience: With the election just four weeks away, the Clinton campaign is clearly getting nervous, and its desperation is showing up on Facebook. We've seen the Clinton team take out its curmudgeon persona, with Project Veritas videotape of a "hot Mic" with Clinton's chief strategist Mark Penn, and "Trump's people" attacking Trump adviser Roger Stone at the Republican convention. Roger Stone's appearance before the convention was a preview of what may be a recurring theme: Trump's campaign is being driven by unrepentant violent neo-conservatives. John Podesta, the Clinton campaign chairman who was also the chief of the Obama White House's Middle East policy, was not a Trump supporter, and he was recently heard to say in his own inimitable fashion: "get Osama bin
