In October, the board unanimously declared DePaul "officially" a charter member of the Big East.Q: Trying to implement mutable subclass of HashMap, getting error "Enum Type mismatch" I'm making a mutable subclass of the HashMap interface, as per the documentation, I added the following three methods to the interface: abstract class HackMap extends HashMap{ @Override public void clear() { } @Override public void put(T key,Object value){ } @Override public Object remove(Object key){ } } After defining the class, I tried doing the following: import java.util.*; public class Demo { public static void main(String[] args) { Map map = new HackMap(); map.put("key", "value"); System.out.println(map.get("key")); } } But I got an error: java.lang.Error: Unresolved compilation problems: HackMap cannot be resolved to a type What is wrong with this code? Edit: I put the HackMap.java file at the same level as the class, at which point it compiled. A: You can not extend another class like that. In the classes Java tutorial it says "When it makes sense to extend, or inherit, a class you will find out quickly." While the HashMap interface is implemented by the class java.util.HashMap. To fix your issue, make HackMap a class with methods like clear() and remove(). The method implementations are then implemented by the extended class via the Java language itself. A: You need to implement your own methods in HackMap. Take a look at this example.
