their dignity. Those who have strong convictions about the merits of their own position are almost without exception able to act on these convictions. Those who are charged with having subverted democracy, on the other hand, are almost always in a state of political shutdown, not because it is better to have none of the truth revealed but because it is still better to have a voice than none, and to make it a strong voice, than none at all. This is what has happened to the Australian Greens, and what may now become a reality for the Canadian Green Party. Howard, the persona non grata, is getting out of politics, and his replacement is a former Liberal minister, Graham Richardson. Richardson does not campaign in the Liberal Party name. The Greens have no official connection to the Liberal Party. In the opinion of current Green leaders, Richardson is likely to be an anti-Green moderate, who might well use the Greens as a convenient foil to withdraw from the Liberal Party and give him a seat at its table. There are rumours that Richardson has been pressured to join the Greens, in order to prevent the Liberals from resuming power. The harder the new government faces the more nasty, the more undemocratic the tactics of the new government become. In effect, they have replaced the Liberals with people, in the party leadership and party positions, who are hostile to the Greens and anyone else committed to the values of environmental sustainability, economic justice, and peace. The government has placed the offices of the Ministry of the Environment in the hands of a nominee of the Liberal Party, Peter Garrett, who in the past has been sharply critical of the Greens' policies and of the Greens. This is the same Garrett who once stood up before a meeting of the National Party, and publicly called on that party to stand aside on an issue concerning Aboriginal people. Obviously the Party could not accept his advice, but the fact that it needed to be asked said it all. For all the official lip service, the new government is floundering in the ministerial barnacles of the old Liberal Party. Richardson is, in practice, running the government in the name of his colleague, the frugal Finance Minister, Michael Wooldridge, who is not able to remain out of politics because of his inherited deficit, and therefore his reputation as a responsible man. The new government, by contrast, is untouchable. It is an authority without accountability. Even if a bill passes, it is only after the same way. Every such treatment of the biblical word "Timothy" as a name means the person so named would have a date of birth, possibly better recognized, in the 30s BC, more or less: The father (ὁ πατήρ) is "Amillius." The mother (ἡ μητρό) is "Timothia." The child was born (διδύων) somewhere between 30 and 36 BC. The date seems close enough for later Christian writers to copy the formula used by themselves. (It did not agree well with the first born son of Timothy, a son named Aemilius, born not in Philip's day but not until the next period, about 1/2 century later). Josephus (Antiquities, 17.5.3) gives a fuller reference, as he had heard of an uncle of Timothy who ruled the area and had a close relationship with the Jews of the time. Josephus names the ruler as "Gaius." The lexicographers of the early 3rd century who wrote in Greek had a name (Μητρό) τιμία) for "Timothy." The KJV translators took it from the Greek, and this was the name the KJV translators gave it and the name we are now used to. But not every writer (even the Greeks) would write the name that way (presumably they knew it from Paul's letters or hearsay). The immediate context in the early church would have included the name Gaius. The earliest reference to Timothy is almost a century later and so was not included.
