The Revolution Despite incredible improvements in graphics and the 3D engine from FIFA 17 to FIFA 18, the gameplay of the FIFA series still remains one of the most popular and recognizable football video games on the market. FIFA players look for the biggest stadiums, the biggest stars, and a ball that flies through the air in slow motion. FIFA 22 introduces “HyperMotion Technology,” which uses motion capture data collected from 22 real-life players playing a complete, high-intensity football match in motion capture suits. The data collected from player movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions is used to power FIFA 22 gameplay. The first step With any new technical addition or gameplay change, we first have to understand the technologies that make the gameplay possible, and if we find any issues, we can optimize them for our players. The top of our list of questions and issues to investigate for FIFA 22 is: Will players be able to move and control the ball differently than they did in previous FIFA games? Will players slide and make ground passes differently? Is dynamic fatigue considered when determining tactics or making game decisions? Will players be required to make more tackles? Will players be required to deal with more cut-ins and random attacks? How much of the motion capture data will be used for dynamic features of the game? We are already making improvements to the dynamic fatigue system. Dynamic fatigue is a term we use for any fatigue effects that increase or decrease the way a player performs over time. We want to make sure that players who are dynamic fatigue and play different ways will have a sense of fatigue based on their gameplay. The development of FIFA 22 started with the game running through the development cycle before it was submitted to our analytics team, who analyze everything we have built from the previous game. This new team of data scientists and gameplay experts now uses the accumulated data we have collected from the FUT Universe to understand the effects we have made in the game and optimize them for our players. The animation team now uses data to make sure that their animation work makes players move and perform a realistic way. We are using the same motion capture data to drive the animation of the lower half of the body, so we can make sure that players don't look like they are running on a metal track while on the ground. The locomotion team also uses this data and puts it into the game
