Fernbus Simulator now includes the Rhine Gorge with two new cities. It is part of the UNESCO World Heritage Sites because of its unique combination of geological, historical, cultural and industrial features. The Rhine Gorge is one of Europe's three most important national parks (Nationalpark Rhein Gorge) and its rich flora and fauna as well as its traditions in riding, boating and rafting make it a paradise for nature-lovers. Travel by bus along the winding curves of the Rhine on both sides and drive along the state roads on both sides of the river. When driving along the state roads on both sides of the River Rhine, you will come across plenty of small, cosy and quaint villages and their inviting beer gardens and pubs. The Lorelei lies in the centre of the Rhine Gorge and you can visit its remarkable view from atop the 132 meters high, steep slate rock on the right bank of the river. Folklore and myth tell of a siren sitting on top of the cliff, combing her golden hair, unwittingly distracted shipmen with her beauty and song, causing them to crash on the rocks. So, drive carefully and don't become distracted yourself by the beauty of this enchanting landscape. The views with the new map layout, higher resolution textures and more detail will open up new possibilities. Some features can now be fully explored and can also be enjoyed from an unusual angle or in a new and more dynamic way. To find my courage, to get through a single room, but there are more rooms and barriers! For that purpose, I will not to show mercy and will not to leave it without solving all puzzles. And while solving of puzzles, I will memorize all locations of obstacles. Then at the exit I will open doors and will be free. I've always liked go, so I decided to make one. It has a nice little theme that doesn't take itself too seriously. You can click on each square to make a rock or a token go. You can make a ball go up the column and make it come back down. You can move one or all of them. You can use a wand to make a door open. The key is that each puzzle has three moves, and you can't see how many moves the opponent has left, so it's really a puzzle-of-dare game. Download the game here. The file is hosted on Google Code, so you'll need to click through to the program and check out their instructions. A few people have commented, asking why I don't update this site more often. Well, that is the simple answer. Life gets in the way. Other sites are updated much more regularly. I have a few ideas that are too big to tackle right now. But I do like seeing other people's ideas, and I can do at least one of them. Here's the idea. It's about folding origami, and involves trying to get your model into a state that is its own mirror image. It's very easy to make models that look like mirrors, but hard to make models that are their own mirror images. So far, I haven't found any that have been very interesting to try. But if someone is interested, I can look into it. Another interesting idea that is too big to tackle right now is a puzzle game with a story line. I've got a few interesting plots to explore, and I'm looking for puzzles that fit in the right places. First, here's an article about a little-known Atari game that is an old-school variation on the board game Chess. I'll put it up on the blog later this week or next. This looks like a hard puzzle game. You have a rectangular board with a line that is on the bottom of the board, perpendicular to the sides of the board. There are moving circles, and it looks like there are obstacles in the way,

What's new in Steel Rats™ Stylish Mayhem - Skins DLC:

I Spent in New Orleans I was 38 when I made that trip to New Orleans for the funeral. We had flown her ashes home over the Atlantic and then I had loaded a cremains charger into the car and driven north. It happened so recently, and my mom was only 66 at the time. It's a very impossible age for a person still to be. My brother is older than me by 4 years, so he was well into his 50s. However his dad died a month after my mom, and oddly enough it was the last time my brother saw his dad. Before I left for Canada, my mom had passed and was buried in the back yard of our friends' house. It was a very moving parting, and we told her good bye in her favorite chaise lounge, surrounded by her lawn furniture, deck, and other lawn stuff that makes me think this was her "forever home". Now, driving to New Orleans she wasn't. So I wasn't. I really tried to understand the idea that New Orleans is just a place now, and yet she would have still been there when she passed away, I was feeling like maybe I'm starting to understand a couple of things now. New Orleans is a very old, large city. We were passing through it on what seemed like Interstate 55. It was built on the Mississippi River and was going to be a railroad town in the 1800s. It was broken and gradually built back, but was never a compact, small town with narrow streets, so things did not happen quickly. I guess its a pretty slow, southern city. Here we passed Mayflower, a place where realtors want you to believe the pilgrims landed and then left. I didn't really know how to react when I passed it now. Then we saw a sign that said "New Orleans" which must have been at least 90 miles of driving before that. I was looking forward to seeing her city, as I am a New Orleanian by choice. After hours of driving we drove to "The French Quarter" her mom's neighborhood. I hadn't been there before, as she lived about 6 miles away, but I knew it was there, I had walked it. Apparently I was looking for a house with things like that. I finally found one, beautiful white wooden Victorian with gables that had a fan on the back porch. But all of

You play as a BlobCat and are a new hero for DiceBuddy. You need to save the DiceMice, but they are trapped in a dangerous world! Your only mission is to help them escape the DiceMicehole. They've forgotten their home world, but they remember that you saved them before. Unfortunately, they don't have much confidence in your abilities. Will you be able to save them? PRINTS AND STICKERS FOR COLLECTORS BlobCat was originally designed in 96 DPI resolution and therefore has been compressed to support the Nintendo Switch. This means, that all the art has been scaled down and there are fewer colors. However, there are 100 unique colors in total and all of them have been redrawn, because they were too hard to read. This is pretty bad news, as this game has been designed with pixel art in mind, which means that every tiny detail is seen in every art piece. The colors and the shapes have been designed to bring the story of DiceBuddy to life and to add charm to your gameplay experience. On the other hand, if you enjoy the game and its pixel art, you can get the game in full resolution and a beautiful version of the game. This extra version of the game is over 300% larger compared to the normal release version. A lot of the art has been rescaled down to 1080 DPI, so the level design now looks much better. THE CONSOLE EDITION IS AVAILABLE FOR ONLY 1.99$ IN THE WII U ESHOP! NOTICE: The TV versions of the game have been released, a few weeks ago. Unfortunately, the streaming of the TV versions is only possible on supported devices, such as the Nintendo Switch. Other platforms will be supported at a later point. If you don't have a Wii U or if you don't stream with the console, you can download the game from and be playing with the incredible TV versions almost immediately. A: The game is free on Steam and it will be free on iOS for you when it's released. If you want to play the game on another platform you have to get it from iOS or from PC. A: The game is available on Steam (and GOG and itunes) for $9.99.
