Slumdog Millionaire 2007 That day was the first day he ever met Mohanbaba. Lord Krishna, Lord Ram, Ganesh, and Lord Shiva, Hanuman, Hemant, Kishor and many many others came to meet Lord Durga. After they all had darshan, Lord Durga's husband Goddess Parvati took Lord Durga to. off the table completely. Look at Reddit's first incarnation which was a moderately popular community for memes: [ ----- JumpCrisscross > _And one thing's for sure: the Internet will not be the same any time soon._ I find it rather ironic that someone writing a post lamenting the decline of the (academic) "blogosphere" due to immobility is attempting to move the discussion somewhere else. I think commercial discussion forums are here to stay. They're as credible a form of signal as one can find to exchange information in the absence of professional journalists. Maybe we should all be more humble about that? ~~~ nthj > commercial discussion forums are here to stay Some of them are so bad that they might not be here to stay. ----- dwg I share Bruce's skepticism of the ability of online forums to maintain readership and content quality, though I'm not sure I have identified the specific problem. That is, I don't think the problem is that the internet as an information space is a failure, as a lot of people seem to think. Rather, the internet as an information space is extraordinarily successful, and the problem is that forums are simply not used as well as other communication means. My hypothesis is that communication technologies that are not computer- mediated tend to be adopted by people on the margins of society and that people that are somewhat less tech-savvy generally benefit less from them than people that are more technically savvy. This is especially true of people that are on the margins of society, though, perhaps, it would also apply more generally. For example, despite the fact that the U.S. has a very sophisticated social safety net, I don't think that the safety net is widely used. People who are not directly in the workplace, or 6d1f23a050
