Aspirate cytology is a common imaging modality used for the diagnosis of breast cancer. Using a novel approach for the analysis of breast aspirate images, we have developed a classifier that automatically determines the location and shape of the myofibrillar structures within the heterogeneous aspirate specimen. This technique improves identification of malignant cells by combining the myofibrillar and nuclear regions of the cell into a composite feature, thereby providing a better understanding of the complex cellular architecture of the aspirate specimen and a means to improve the diagnostic accuracy of the classifier. In addition to the potential for automation of the analysis, a key advantage of the system is that it is not biased toward any specific type of cell population, ensuring a more generic and more accurate diagnosis. Koh Samui Koh Samui is the second largest island of the Gulf Islands of Thailand, in Surat Thani Province. It is also officially known as Tonsai Samui and can be said that it is the oldest and most famous of Thailand's islands, as it has a very long history and is also better known abroad, as it was the first Thai island to be made into a resort in the 20th century. The island is surrounded by the Andaman Sea to the north, Gulf of Thailand to the c6a93da74d
