among parents with children in a residential treatment program for substance abuse. To examine the relation between parent and child depressive symptoms among parents in treatment for substance abuse.

In a cross-sectional design, 156 parents completed measures of depressive symptoms, substance use, and family characteristics. Depressive symptoms were not related to any family characteristics. Child depressive symptoms were correlated positively with substance use and were unrelated to family characteristics. Depressive symptoms are not unique to substance abusers; they appear to be present in depressed and nondepressed parents of substance abusers. This finding has implications for the treatment of both parent and child.Impact of dietary factors on the gastrointestinal microbial community

This tutorial, however, does have some extra "steps". Installation Steps: The Linux kernel is distributed as a source code archive, which is installed onto the PC. It is not a program as such, although you can try to run it. You will be asked to open a terminal and type the command `./make`. There are some extra steps you need to take if you want a working installation. I will try to provide the steps for a Debian system, although the steps may be very similar for other distributions. This package contains the command line tools which are required to install and manage the Linux system. The commands are: `sudo su make make install mkinitramfs -o /initrd.img-2.6.24-k7 /initrd.img-2.6.24-k7 mkinit`
