SAN FRANCISCO--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- Adobe introduced on Tuesday the newly revamped Starburst publication design at Adobe MAX 2017, the world's largest creativity conference where Adobe announced a host of new products and creative experiences. With Starburst's release, Adobe is now offering an innovative workflow for print publications with a new vector art standard for wordmark creation: Adobe Typekit, a subscription service that allows designers to create beautiful typefaces from the Adobe Typekit library. Starburst's redesign also follows last year's release of the new Adobe Edge Web experience at Adobe MAX 2016, which incorporates the company's Edge design and technology. The visual design is inspired by iconic newspaper typefaces and archive photos from the 1940s, '50s and '60s. Adobe Starburst addresses the twin pressures of shrinking pixels and the rising popularity of digital formats, by crafting an artful, magazine-like design that retains the timeless magazine feel and allow the readers to access the content more fluidly.
